

4-week Sprint is the longest allowed in Scrum

	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
Week one	SPM 1 <4h	<small>DS 5-15m</small> 6h	<small>DSM 5-15m</small> 6h	<small>DS 5-15m</small> 6h	<small>DSM 5-15m</small> 6h	e.g. 08
	SPM 2 <4h					e.g. 12
Week two	<small>DS 5-15m</small> 6h = estimated development work capacity / 7.5h workday	<small>DSM 5-15m</small> 6h	<small>DS 5-15m</small> 6h	<small>DSM 5-15m</small> 6h	<small>DS 5-15m</small> 6h	e.g. 16
						e.g. 08
Week three	<small>DS 5-15m</small> 6h	<small>DSM 5-15m</small> 6h	<small>DS 5-15m</small> 6h	<small>DSM 5-15m</small> 6h	<small>DS 5-15m</small> 6h	e.g. 12
						e.g. 16
Week four	<small>DSM 5-15m</small> 6h	<small>DS 5-15m</small> 6h	<small>DSM 5-15m</small> 6h	<small>DS 5-15m</small> 6h	Sprint Review <4h Sprint Retrospective <4h	e.g. 08
				<small>Last "Daily Scrum" possibly here. Or other prep for Review</small>		e.g. 12
						e.g. 16

Actually the Scrum guide says one month, but 4-weeks is just 2.44 days less than an average month = ~one month. Less agile and rarely used. Maybe could be used in steady slow business based on the law and standards? The Tax Authority, Banking, or Insurance? And even there not in the feedback-based UX development, but specifications-based backend? Another possibility: E-shop already running well, monthly rolling budgeting. Publishing improvements (non-critical) monthly, gathering e.g. digital marketing tool info as feedback. ((In the real life, again, planning might be on Wednesday after having Tuesday for Review and Retro. Thus long-distance travelers would need to travel just once a month))

<4h means e.g. 4h, 3.5h, or 3h. Just memorize (max) 4h. See the 1-week schedules for more info.

2010-2020 Juhani Välimäki